Australian Vanadium has joined fellow Perth company Carnegie Clean Energy in hoping to help solve South Australia's energy crisis, today committing to tender to build a battery storage facility in that state.

SA Premier Jay Weatherill yesterday announced a $150 million renewable technology fund, which he said would pay for the construction of a 100-megawatt battery storage facility.

Australian Vanadium subsidiary VSun Energy has a distribution agreement for vanadium flow batteries with Austrian battery manufacturer Gildemeister, and has previously installed capacity at a property near Busselton.
